SUSAN'S THE RAGE OF LONDON

I recommend this picture. Miss Fontaine's performance was to me a continuous delight. —Simon Harcourt Smith, Daily Mail.
 I dare say Joan Fontaine will get another Oscar for this. Her performance is the peak of light comedy acting, and this picture is the peak of light entertainment beautifully written. —Ernest Betts, Sunday Express.
 Most enjoyable. To know Susie, you must see this film. Miss Fontaine's voice is one of the loveliest in pictures. —Merton Hodge, Daily Sketch.

"Crikey—have we got to start all over again?"

THE BASIC POWER?

IT is being said that the new bomb and its possible successors will either end war or end the world! These hasty, epigrammatic conclusions should be regarded with considerable scepticism. There is always the chance of a most depressing compromise. What might really happen is something between the two extremes, leaving mankind in a very wretched condition for many generations with horrific wars going on in a depleted and disintegrating society. But let us take a more cheerful view.

Mind Over Matter

To assert that atomic energy is the basic power in the universe is to regard the universe purely from a material point of view. There is a greater power and it resides in the heart and mind of man. Basic power is moral power, because from moral power comes the decision whether the forces of nature, as they become known and released, are to be used for good purposes or evil purposes. That is the whole point. You cannot stop scientific progress. You cannot put back the clock. But you can try to make sure that the results of scientific discovery are applied to the welfare and advancement of the human race and not to its destruction.

How can this obviously desirable end be reached? The answer is: By moral power expressing itself through political institutions. The big issue therefore is whether our existing forms of government are adequate to control the new forces which have been launched upon the world. Democracy has shown that it can outpace the dictatorships, and leave them far behind.

It is to the evolution of the democratic ideal, which stands not only for national comradeships, but for international co-operation, that we must look in view of the scientific revolution now taking place. A new heaven and a new earth will not come overnight. We have still to learn how to live with one another! International unselfishness, which is the vital element in world co-operation is, as yet, only an idea on the horizon

Good or Evil

Atomic energy is a "sovereign power" beyond anything we have seen on the earth. It puts into the shade all "national" sovereignties. It forces us along an ever-broadening political highway, the end of which is a world all of one mind. The next problem is how to harness the new power. The next issue is whether the new power is to be exploited for the good of the common man, or exploited to enslave him.

Hun officer lost secret plans, saved the BEF... was promoted

THE capture of one document by the British just before Dunkirk robbed the German High Command of a chance of trapping the British Expeditionary Force, it was revealed by a senior officer with the U.S. forces in Frankfurt, Germany, yesterday.

A German staff officer carrying secret documents drove his car too near the British lines, came under machine-gun fire, and had to abandon the car, which caught fire.

The papers were saved from the flames and were found to contain complete details of the coming German attack on the Low Countries, as well as details of another attack shortly to be made on a British sector, designed to cut off the BEF near Dunkirk.

This sector twenty miles long in the Calais-Boulogne area, was thinly held. The British commander at once decided to concentrate forces at the point where the attack was due, leaving the rest of the line barely manned at all.

I.G. FARBEN CHIEF IS CAPTURED

Dr Karl Krauch, chairman of the board of directors of I.G. Farbenindustries, who has evaded American intelligence officers for the past three months, has been arrested.

His capture is regarded as of the utmost importance since he will be one of the principal witnesses at the trial of a number of I.G. Farben chiefs now held in detention.

The Germans attacked in considerable strength, but the line held. If the attack had gone through, 360,000 men might never have reached the famous Dunkirk beaches.

The same documents gave the Allies for the first time the full strength and units of the German Army.

The German officer concerned must have told a good story on his return to the German lines. He was not only not punished, but rose to the rank of major-general and is believed to have died a natural death.

Bombed Their Own Men

Another enemy document which came into Allied hands one morning in the autumn of 1943 gave details of an attack to be made forty-five minutes later at 8 a.m.

It ordered the German artillery to fire one smoke shell every thirty seconds at the point where the breakthrough was to be made, to mark the U.S. positions for the Luftwaffe.

The U.S. Corps Commander ordered his artillery to open up on the Germans just opposite the U.S. target area, four minutes before zero hour. The trick misled the German planes and their bombs killed 720 of their own men.

The German plan for the attack on Strasburg in 1944 was found in the notebook of a captured officer. It did not give the date, but U.S. 7th Army intelligence officers calculated it would probably come on New Year's Eve. It did and the German 17th S.S. Panzer Division was cut to pieces.
